Rt Hon Jean Chretien PC QC MP

Prime Minister of Canada

I know you will be following with close interest this week's proceedings in Belfast. If the path to negotiations has been difficult, our task now is even more challenging.

Before events overtake us, I wanted to let you know how much I value your continuing support for both the peace process and General John de Chastelain's valuable contribution to it. We remain committed to the success of these negotiations and are very glad that General de Chastelain has again agreed to assist in resolving the difficult issues which lie ahead.

The first two days of talks have been difficult, but the process has survived, and the ability to produce compromises has been demonstrated by most of the parties. This is moderately encouraging. We will do all we can to enable the talks to move forward.
