Sinn Féin President Gerry Adams commenting on last night's attack on a British Army base in Germany said:

"Whoever was responsible for the attack on the British Army base in Germany it is clear that it presents all of us with a challenge to produce an alternative to conflict which can bring it to a permanent end.

Inclusive dialogue is the only means by which this can be achieved.

Last night's incident, like other recent events, should not be allowed to become a cause of paralysis. Rather it should act as a spur on political leaders to work even harder to restore the peace process.
